

BROOKINGS

QUALITY. INDEPENDENCE. IMPACT.

Liz Barron

Liz Barron is director of leadership programs at the Brookings Institution's Center for Executive Education.

Previously, Liz Barron was a senior executive for both Discovery Communications Incorporated and the BBC, the United Kingdom's public service broadcaster.

Liz's background in news journalism and television production brings a unique perspective—and a creative energy—to the executive education programs she designs and delivers. Her teaching skills and leadership experience are supplemented by her Masters in Public Administration from George Washington University. Liz is an executive coach and graduate of the Georgetown Leadership Coaching program, accredited by the International Coach Federation (ICF). She is a certified mediator (Merge Consultants AZ) and is certified to administer the Center for Creative Leadership's suite of 360-degree assessments.

Originally from Northern Ireland, Liz now lives by the Chesapeake Bay with her two teenage children.